Bombay Gin is the literary journal published annually by the Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics at the Naropa Institute. Copyright 1991. All rights revert back to the authors and artists upon publication. Please address all correspondence to Editors, Bombay Gin, The Naropa Institute, 2123 Arapahoe Avenue, Boulder, Colorado, 80302. Only submissions accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope can be returned.
Table of Contents

Cover illustration  M.S. TREE  Artistic Beauty
JACK COLLOM  Concrete Plane Crash illustration
1  HARRY SMITH/JACK COLLOM  Indian Lore
2  ELENI SIKELIANOS  Ode to Greek Grandmothers
3  KATHY ACKER  War Story
4  LOUIS VILLAIRE  Newsflash Poem: Sign of the Times
5  LOUIS VILLAIRE  John Calvin: Christian Humorlessnessist
6  PETER LAMBORN WILSON  interview by KARL SCHMIEDER
7  GARY ALLEN  Canto XVI
8  LUCIA BERLIN Lead Street, Albuquerque
9  LAWRENCE FERLINGHETTI & ALLEN GINSBERG  poem illustration
10  BATAAN FAIGAO  The General’s Canto
11  ELIOI GREENSPAN  Three Poems
12  TED DACE  Inspire/Expire Inbreathe/Outbreathe
13  MARK DUCHARME  Lorraine, Goddess of Nonchalance
14  LISA JANSEN  Four Poems
15  CHARLES BUKOWSKI  why oh why oh why and why not?
16  CHARLES BUKOWSKI  writer’s block
17  CHARLES BERNSTEIN  Four Poems
18  THOMAS R. PETERS, JR.  Death drives a flat black Mercury (part 1)
19  OZZIE CHEEK The Best Pain
20  M.S. TREE  Casually of Romance illustration
21  CLAIRE MCMANION  Hung over Love Poem
22  BILL FACKLER  Anything can happen in life today
23  ROBERT MASTERSON  Our Barbies, Ourselves
24  JENNIFER JANOVY  Kansas
25  LAWRENCE FERLINGHETTI  A Report on a Happening in North Beach, San Francisco
26  RIKKI DUCORNET  The Mummies
27  RIKKI DUCORNET  illustration
28  KENWARD ELMSLIE  Lads, a song from Night Emerald
29  KATIE YATES  Reference
30  TRANSLATIONS —“to carry off to heaven while still living”  M.S. TREE  Haiku Heart illustration
31  LI PO translated by EIKO YOKOYAMA
32  CLARIBEL ALEGRIA translated by D.J. FLAKOLL  Haciendo Maltes/Packing My Bags
33  BENJAMIN PERET translated by TOM MALONE  Louis XVI Heads to the Guillotine
34  HENRI MICHAUX translated by TOM MALONE  On the Road to Death
35  Two 13th Century Italian Poems translated by CHUCK PIRTLE
36  Three Poems from the Sattasai translated by ANDREW SCHELLING
37  Sweeney the Madman translated by JOHN WRIGHT
38  KURT SCHWITTERS translated by JEROME ROTHEMBERG  Wound Roses Roses Bleed
39  FEDERICO GARCIA LORCA translated by JEROME ROTHEMBERG from Suites
40  JULIA VINOGRADE For the Berkeley Inn, Where I Lived for 15 Years Being Torn Down
41  ERICA SCHEIDT Taken in Context
42  JOHN GREB A Bizarre Fantasy Kind Of Game That Went Wrong
43  FIELDING DAWSON Under the Trees on the Hill
44  M.S. TREE Breaking Tradition illustration
45  REBECCA BUSH Poems
46  ROBERT KELLY Problem Words: Two Poems
47  DEVORAH DETLOFF from Strumm
48  JAMES R. MERRILL Drive Slow
49  JOHN ROSS Two Poems
50  NATHANIEL MACKEY from Zar
51  ANGEL HIERONYMOUS The Falling Man
52  ROBERT CREELEY “You Were Never Lovelier...”
53  KYLE MCDANIEL A.W.O.L.
54  ROBERT NAGLER ...and counting
55  ANDREW SCHELLING Down From Stone The Slab Sierra Hermaphrodite On Receiving Pat’s Book
56  DENISE A ROMANO war poems #1-3
57  KEITH ABBOTT Paradise, Nevada
58  CHRIS TYSH from Coat of Arms
59  BOBBIE LOUISE HAWKINS The Saquine Breast of Margaret, (excerpt)
60  B.L. KENNEDY Ground Zero
61  ANNE WALDMAN from lovis Omnia Plena
62  JANE AUGUSTINE illustration
But babies. You've got to admit that it's women, not men, who have babies.'

So an artist whom I know, not well, told this story about babies:

He had had this girlfriend, see. Whom he had sent to some rehab center to be rehабbed, or whatever happens to people. Instead of being rehабbed, she had fallen in love with another addict and they had run away from the rehab center.

He, the artist, couldn't stand losing love. He had had the habit of hanging around Coney Island. Before the girlfriend disappeared. Buying things there. Relics. After love left him, he went back to Coney Island like murderers are supposed to to the scenes of their crimes.

Boarded-up windows of apartment buildings more decrepit than the old men who work in and work this section of the world. Fleas living on sand.

Tears neither present nor absent 'cause no one cries for junkies.

Slabs of pissed-and-puked-on wood rose out of the sands. Or the smell of dead semen over which water passes, now and then, but never erases. Dead seagulls don't venture to this spot. It's the dead season so the freaks are ghosts. LEDA, half-swan, half-woman, no one could guess which half was which. It was all and it is all dead fish.

As the artist's walking past one of the rotting buildings, the kind that knows how to stand, an old man, not standing, across the street says his name.

The artist looks and sees a wiggling finger. 'I've got something for you.'

The artist crosses the street to see what the man's got. The kind of old man that likes little girls.

'Come here.' The artist has come here: he's been here before. Buying. His whole family was touched by cancer.

Down a few streets, there's a sort of building next to an empty carnival tent. The kind of building that houses those between the living and the dead. The United States has been here before.

'It's the pride of my collection.'

Then down some stairs where there were holes in the wood that didn't exist, but it was too dark for the artist to see the holes.

'...Pride of my collection. A few months ago they declared it illegal. Declaring everything illegal these days. So I have no use for it.'

Between the living and the dead.

'I'll give it to you for 500 bucks.'

The room below was filled with crap. Refuse of carnivals. Halves of stripper outfits; green and bleached-blonde wigs; posters of Madonna and geeks; cigarettes that died in flesh; a dead, stuffed cockatoo in a huge iron cage swung by a life-size iron woman; tattooed skin preserved in formaldehyde. The formaldehyde had seen better days.

In the back was an antique or old table. A large bell jar stood there. Some sort of thick bubbly fluid filled the jar.

Tiny fingers splayed in the liquid. Some of the fingers were closing, rigid, as if they wanted a cigarette. Other fingers pointed to the artist. The huge fish mouth was open.

The artist could smell the dead fish that were outside this room.

He gave the man 500 dollars.

The room upstairs reminded the artist of one in a museum in his recurring dream.

This part of the natural history museum was filled with aquariums. Inside their cages, fish moved as if alive.

Fish tanks ran from floor to ceiling. Their glass began to shatter. Fish, monsters, and all sorts of debris lay on the floor. Every monster imaginable. The artist, trapped in this museum, felt only horror. The waters began to rise.

The museum was an inescapable labyrinth.

As the artist was walking down the street of dead-fish smells that led to the subway, he looked down at the jar he was carrying and thought that his girlfriend had left him a present.